About the Westfjords of Iceland!

Hi, there! Let me tell you a little bit about us, the Westfjords of Iceland is a large peninsula at the north western part of Iceland. The Westfjords only has about 7.000 inhabitants and is around 22 km² of size, so even with growing numbers of visitors there is still plenty of space for everyone.

The Westfjords were built up around the fishing industry due to its location close to some of the best fishing grounds in Iceland. We are therefore, settled in many small villages all around the region – and for centuries our lives revolved around fish, fish and some more fish. On your journey you will most likely become aware of this legacy, you might see a fish drying hut alongside the road, you might eat fresh seafood at one of our many restaurants or see our fishermen heading out to sea early in the morning.

This is the segment where we do some bragging, all nine of the municipalities of the Westfjords have joined hands and taken a big step towards sustainability. We are now in a benchmarking process with EarthCheck, an international tourism and environmental management and advisory group. Our focus is becoming an environmentally certified community where we take nature into the account in all our decision making. So we are working on becoming lean, green and sustainable!

In the Westfjords there are endless options for recreation. Are you a nature loving hippie, a family of five, an obsessive birdwatcher or an amateur hiker, we have something right up your alley. Whether it is your dream to pet an arctic fox, hike for three days and see nobody else, run on red sandy beaches or soak in a geothermal hot pool, the Westfjords are the place to make that dream come true.

In this handbook you will find information about the Westfjords of Iceland that hopefully will make your journey even more enjoyable. For further information go to: www.westfjords.is Welcome to the Westfjords, enjoy your stay and hopefully we'll see you again.

P.S. Hope you will help us spread the word #Westfjords

Westfjords

Westfjords Pop. 7.000

The Westfjords region has sometimes been dubbed “the most famous unknown place in Iceland”. Well, throw in the prestigious “European Destination of Excellence” awards and add to that the fact that the Lonely Planet travel guide put the area on its top 10 list of regions in the world to visit in 2011, and you will see that the Westfjords are becoming increasingly famous – or perhaps less unknown.

Lonely Planet, the respected travel guide publisher, placed the Westfjords in its top 10 regions of the world to visit in 2011, saying that the “oddly shaped” peninsula is “as isolated as it is spectacular”. Luckily, “isolated” does not mean inaccessible. With only 7400 inhabitants in the area, each person has around 1,2 km² of personal space, so there is ample room for visitors as well.

Although the locals are great, it is, by and large, the nature that attracts visitors. For understandable reasons as well: it is untouched and almost uninhabited. The cliffs and valleys are packed with birds, the uninhabited fjords offer a moment of silence and tranquillity, and the Arctic fox proudly roams the mountains and inlets. The waterfalls are high and the streams pure. The distances are long and the fjords are deep. And then there are places where there are no roads at all.

The Westfjords are a great place to watch the Northern Lights (Aurora Borealis) during the winter and equally fantastic to experience the midnight sun during the summer.

Visiting the Westfjords is surely a different experience. It is Iceland, but yet a different Iceland altogether.

Reykhólar

If you are interested in bird-watching, the small village of Reykhólar is the perfect hub. The sea closest to shore is very shallow and with a high tidal range. These conditions, combined with the marshes and ponds found inland create a bountiful biota and a perfect environment for a rich bird life.

In Reykhólar you can enjoy a new and unique exhibition, dedicated to the various gifts of nature in the Breiðafjörður area and their utilization by farmers and fishermen. One of them is the eider duck, providing the celebrated eiderdown, collected and refined here for centuries. The traditional wooden boats built and used in Breiðafjörður Bay are also displayed here. In Grund near Reykhólar you find antique tractors and in Seljanes there is a collection of vintage cars.

The village is also famous for its kelp factory, the only factory in Iceland that processes seaweed. The products are used in food, animal fodder, fuel, fertilizers and for medicinal purposes, to name just a few.

Patreksfjörður

The biggest town in the southern region of Westfjords is Patreksfjörður and it is situated in a fjord bearing the same name. The fjord got its name from its first settler, whose spiritual guide was St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland. Somewhat fittingly it was in this fjord that the first potatoes were cultivated in Iceland in the 18th century. Early in the 20th century, Patreksfjörður was a pioneering force in Iceland's fishing industry, initiating trawler fishing. Still today the chief occupation is commercial fishing and fish processing.

Patreksfjörður is also a service centre for the southern region with a hospital, bank, post office, pharmacy, swimming pool with excellent sport facilities and various other services, such as restaurants, cafés, craft galleries and gift shops. Just a few km outside town is an excellent golf course as well as many challenging hiking trails.

Tálknafjörður

Tálknafjörður is a friendly village in the southern part of the Westfjords, with a population of approximately 300. For centuries, most of the locals made their living from fishing, and they still do of course, but in order to diversify its economy, the town now welcomes large groups of tourists every year, the biggest attraction being sea angling.

In the northern part of the fjord, hot water springs from the earth. This pure energy is used for fish farming and heating the swimming pool. Bonuses to this geothermal activity are natural hot pools located just outside the village. There is nothing better after a long day on the road, than to glide down into the warm water and enjoy the stunning beauty of the surrounding mountains. Various hiking trails can be found on either side of the fjord, many of them old riding paths, used to cross the surrounding mountains and heaths.

Bíldudalur

Bíldudalur is an beautiful little village that enjoys some of the best summer weather in the Westfjords. Due to its position, the sea breeze rarely reaches the town, making it an excellent place to hang out on sunny days.

The largest industry in town is a sea mineral plant that processes calcified red seaweed, harvested from the seabed, mainly used in animal feed, hygiene and fertiliser products.

Although the population of this picturesque village is only about 200, music and culture have thrived there for decades. Therefore it should be no surprise that there are two museums found in the village. The Icelandic Sea Monster Museum opened in 2009, offering an action-packed multimedia display of the local tales of sea monsters, which have played a colourful role in Icelandic folk culture for centuries. Melodies of the Past is a peculiar music museum in town, exhibiting Icelandic musical memorabilia.

Road

Pingeyri

Pingeyri is a small village situated on a spit of land in one of Iceland's most scenic fjords, Dýrafjörður. Like in most other seaside villages in Iceland, the culture and industry has been shaped by the sea throughout the centuries. Pingeyri provides various services to the surrounding countryside as well as to its visitors; a small shop, post office, bank and a swimming pool at the local sports hall.

Simbahöllin is a homely café, specializing in Belgian waffles, set in a beautifully renovated old Norwegian house from 1915. Another point of interest is the oldest functioning mechanic workshop in Iceland, established in the year 1913.

Pingeyri is the home of a Viking project, hosting a Viking festival every summer.

One of Iceland's most scenic golf courses is just a stone's throw from Pingeyri, with the Westfjords Alps as a backdrop, including the highest mountain of the peninsula, Kaldbakur (998 metres).

Flateyri

Flateyri has been a trading post since 1792 and saw its heyday in the 19th century when it was home to a fleet of decked vessels and the base for shark-hunting and whaling operations. With its fishing industry grinding to a halt, Flateyri, like so many other fishing villages, is dependent on tourism in the summer months; the majority of visitors being sea anglers from Europe. Kayaking is also a popular activity for tourists.

The old bookshop has been turned into a museum where the history of the village is displayed. Visitors can also buy second hand books and visit an old merchant's home. An international doll museum can also be found in Flateyri.

A small shop, bank, post office and a pub provide visitors with all the basic services.

There is a nice sandy beach on the other side of the fjord, and although the sea might be colder for bathing than most people prefer, the sand is great for building sand castles.

Suðureyri

Suðureyri is a traditional, yet eco-conscious fishing village that is pioneering a new concept that draws visitors into the daily work life of the village. That's what I'm taking a break from!", you might say. However, a change is often as good as a break and an opportunity to try or just take a look at something you would never normally get to do. Whether joining a fishing boat crew, visit the cod in the lagoon or touring a fish-processing factory, these are authentic cross-cultural experiences you're unlikely to forget! Here you will find a village that is working together as a team to provide the visitor with an understanding of their way of life - a life they are justifiably proud to share. Here you can learn about all the steps involved in bringing that delicious fish from the sea to your plate.

All basic services can be found in Suðureyri and the outside swimming pool is one of the most popular in the area on sunny summer days.

Bolungarvík

Bolungarvík is the northernmost village in the Westfjords, situated on an eponymous cove.

The village has been a fishing port since settlement, so naturally the most popular tourist attraction in Bolungarvík is the Ósvör museum, a fascinating replica of an old fishing outpost. There, the museum curator greets visitors wearing a skin suit similar to the one Icelandic fishermen wore in the 19th century. In addition there is a natural history museum in town that hosts a large geological collection, also an extensive bird and mammal collection, including a polar bear.

Another popular visiting point is the top of Bolafjall Mountain offering a staggering view. There is a road all the way to the top to service the radar station up there. It is open to tourists in the summer months only.

Amenities include a gas station, shops and different types of accommodation, as well as an indoor swimming pool and a sports centre. Just outside the village, there is a nine hole golf course.

Hnífsdalur

Hnífsdalur is a small village between Ísafjörður and Bolungarvík. With a population of only 250, most of the inhabitants work in Ísafjörður, which is only about 5 kilometres away.

No actual services can be found in the quiet village, but it is a great place for nature lovers and outdoor enthusiasts. The deep valley that the village derives its name from is lush and green, with a river winding through it. Multiple hiking trails can be found in the valley and surrounding mountains, both moderate and challenging. Hnífsdalur is easily reached by bus, with multiple departures from Ísafjörður every weekday.

Trivia: The people of Hnífsdalur are a home-loving bunch. So much that a family living in Hnífsdalur built their summerhouse, yes you guessed it, a little bit further up the valley. Why go far if everything you need is near at hand?

Ísafjörður

Ísafjörður is the largest town in the peninsula. It is conveniently located between five smaller villages, and being the capital of the area it is the centre of interest in the peninsula.

On the gravel spit that stands out into the fjord, small corrugated houses line the streets. Having a wharf all around the spit is fitting, as fish and seafaring has always been the name of the game. For the tourist, Ísafjörður has a range of services for all budgets and tastes. An array of day tours, both in the wilderness and closer to civilisation, are available, for hikers, paddlers and other outdoorsy types of course, but also for those wanting a leisurely culture walk or a visit to a museum.

Trivia: all three roads out of town are through tunnels. Iceland's oldest and shortest tunnel connects to neighbouring Súðavík, the newest connects it to Bolungarvík and the longest connects it to both Suðureyri and Flateyri.

Súðavík

The small and friendly fishing village of Súðavík, 20 kilometres from Ísafjörður. Since 1995, when an avalanche destroyed a big part of the village, it has been divided into two parts, the old and the new. The new village was built on a location safe from avalanches, and the old part is kept intact as a summer resort for travellers.

Súðavík is a great place to visit, especially for families. The family garden Raggagarður, is a playground in the heart of the old town. It is created for kids and adults alike, a place where the whole family can spend time together. Another attraction is The Arctic Fox Centre, an exhibition and research centre focusing on the only native terrestrial mammal in Iceland, the Arctic fox. The Arctic Fox Centre also serves as a district information centre.

Iceland Sea angling ehf is the oldest sea angling project of Westfjords. It offers boats and accommodation services in Súðavík, Tálknafjörður and Bolungarvík. The town is an excellent place for hiking and local guide is available for neighbouring routes. Súðavík has two restaurants, a café, nice and quiet camping place, grocery shop, gas station, post office and bank service.

Súðavík municipality is known for its rich Blueberry fields and celebrates the harvest of the summer with the Blueberry festival in August.

Hólmavík

Hólmavík is the largest town in the Strandir region, an area with an exciting and tragic history of witchcraft, witch-hunting and sorcery. Inhabitants in the countryside surrounding Hólmavík live mostly on sheep farming, while economic activity in town revolves around the fisheries and the service sector.

The Museum of Sorcery & Witchcraft takes visitors on a tour into the mystical world of the supernatural. The history of witch-hunting in 17th century Iceland is presented at the exhibition as well as various aspects of magic from more recent sources. A second part of the exhibition, The Sorcerer's Cottage, is in Bjarnarfjörður, 23 kilometres from Hólmavík. The Cottage is a replica of an old turf house where an exhibition gives a glimpse of how a tenant farmer lived in Iceland in the 17th century and what magic he used to make life more tolerable. Next to Hólmavík is also the Sheep Farming Museum, an entertaining exhibition about the Icelandic sheep and sheep farming.

Visitors will find all basic amenities, and more, in Hólmavík. A golf course is to be found not far from town and there's a newly built swimming pool in town. A good Tourist Information Centre is in Hólmavík that serves the whole area. The swimming pool is next to the camping ground and upon the hills by Hólmavík, there are good and marked hiking paths.

Drangsnes

Drangsnes is a fishing village, pure and simple. Conveniently located near the fishing grounds, it thrives in its minimalistic ways. In fact, the entrepreneur who runs the local restaurant and one of the guesthouses is a fisherman. He also runs the boat tours to Grímsey. Grímsey island, supposedly formed by a giant trying to dig the Westfjords apart from the rest of Iceland, is the biggest attraction in Drangsnes. The boat ride is only 10 minutes across. Grímsey boasts a rich bird life of puffins, fulmars and an interesting side story of fox farming.

It does not come as a surprise that in this small hamlet, the camping place is just by the municipality's office building, as synergy is always important in small villages. Lastly: although the new swimming pool in town is of top notch quality, the blend-in-with-the-locals way of bathing would be to dip into the small hot pools at the shore.

Borðeyri

This small settlement, once a flourishing trading centre, has seen its population and level of service decline in the last couple of decades. It has a garage and a school, but more importantly for travellers, both a guesthouse and a camping place. As one can imagine, personal service is of high importance there. On the list of must-sees is the oldest house, the Riis-house. It was home to a merchant by the name of; you guessed it, Riis, who lived in Borðeyri in the early 1900s. Other service is provided at the nearby Staðarskáli, at the crossroads between north, west and south.

Ísafjörður is an attraction in itself. "A cosmopolitan oasis" according to the Lonely Planet guide book. Take their word for it. Ísafjörður is the tourist hub, the place where many a tourist stocks up and takes the last look at the map before venturing into a trek in Homstrandir wilderness.

Gourmands have a choice of places. The hotel in town has a seasonal variety of local delicacies such as puffins and whales, while the accolade restaurant Tjöruhúsið at the maritime museum is all about fish. There is no menu; the waiter just tells guests the fish offered, depending on what the fishermen caught earlier in the day.

Also, Ísafjörður hosts an impressive array of events, many of whom are world famous. Take the Aldrei fór ég suður music festival, held at Easter, and the European Championship in Swamp Soccer, held in early August. In the latter, a few hundred mad and glad people come together for a muddy competition in dirty tricks.

The Eco-Friendly Fishing Village

A large fleet of small boats sails from the harbor to rich fishing grounds nearby all year round. Fishing methods include long-lines and hand-lines and the catch is processed as soon as it is landed. Fancy a guided tour around a hi-tech fish processing plant or go out with the fishing boats?

Suðureyri fishermen strive to practice sustainable, environmentally friendly fishing in complete harmony with nature. By doing this they ensure their own future and their children's future. The village enjoys a supply of geothermal hot water and a hydroelectric power station that provides the residents of the fjord with green electricity. This is how the residents of Suðureyri want to see their village develop. Every visitor should take the opportunity to enjoy some of the village's products in local restaurants.

This traditional yet eco-conscious fishing village is a pioneering model that welcomes visitors into the daily work rituals of Icelandic life. These are the kinds of authentic cross-cultural experiences you're unlikely to forget.

Látrabjarg cliffs

The cliffs of all cliffs, Látrabjarg, are home to birds in unfathomable numbers. This westernmost point of Iceland (and Europe if the Azores are not counted) is really a line of several cliffs, 14 kilometres long and up to 441 km high. And it's as steep as it gets, dizzyingly so. Safe from foxes, the birds are fearless, and provide stunning photographic opportunities from close range. Bird photography for dummies, you might say. The puffins are particularly tame and are the ones frequenting the grassy, higher part of the cliffs. But look out, the edges are fragile and loose and the fall is high.

Látrabjarg is thus deservedly the most visited tourist attraction in the Westfjords. The cliffs are easily accessible by car and when you're there, a walk along the cliffs awaits. The whirling sensation will not fade, and neither will the memories. Látrabjarg is on the National Geographic's top-10 list for the best ocean views in the world.

Dynjandi waterfall

Simply enthralling; The Westfjords' favourite front-page model for decades, and is never short of breathtaking. The biggest and widest part of the waterfall is the one that gets all the attention and the photos, even though there are impressive, albeit smaller, waterfalls further down the river. In fact, one is formed in such a way that the brave can walk behind it, relatively dry. There is a camping place at the site with basic services. There are guided tours available from Ísafjörður and Patreksfjörður for those wanting a little extra.

To enjoy, follow this simple step-by-step manual. 1. Stop your car at the parking lot. 2. Walk all the way up to the biggest part of the waterfall, it, takes about 15 minutes. 3. Take a deep breath and enjoy the surroundings. 4. Whenever ready, go back down to the car. 5. Tick off this article and continue working through the check-list.

Dýrafjörður and surroundings

Dýrafjörður was the Westfjords' most important centre of trade for many centuries, attracting merchants and fishermen from all around Europe and the USA. In the 19th century, the French government even sought to establish its own colony there. Although Dýrafjörður has now lost its former status as a trade-centre, it still attracts visitors from all around the world, people who come there to enjoy its unique nature and tranquility. The village Þingeyri, in Dýrafjörður, is the home to some 260 people. It offers all necessary services to travelers, including a horse rental, a chance to sail onboard a Viking ship and you might also want to visit the Old Blacksmith's Workshop.

Þingeyri is nestled under the beautiful mountains often referred to as the "Westfjords' Alps". There you will find Kaldbakur, the highest mountain in the Westfjords area. On the peninsula between Dýrafjörður and Amarfjörður, the rough jeep road Svalvogar offers breathtaking views, but it is not for the faint hearted to drive, there are several companies offering jeep tours around this beautiful peninsula. Hiking, biking or horseback riding along Svalvogar is also very popular. On the northern shore of Dýrafjörður you will find Skrúður, Iceland's oldest botanical garden.

Flatey Island

Beautifully kept old houses in cheerful colours line the dusty path through the settlement of Flatey island. Walk through it, and at the end of the settlement, the path becomes even narrower and more crooked, taking you through a dense population of birds, consisting mainly of Arctic terns. Two families stay on the island throughout the winter, but many more migrate during the summer, mainly for leisure but also to serve tourists.

In a charming way, it feels very much like a movie set. And so it is. Many movies are set on the island, most notably The Honour of the House based on a short story by Nobel Prize winner Halldór Laxness, White Night Wedding, a movie by Baltasar Kormákur and Nonni og Manni. In fact, Baltasar's father painted the unusual altar piece in the island's church, making it worthy of a visit.

In summertime, a ferry goes to Flatey twice a day from Stykkishólmur and Brjánslækur, and, albeit less frequently, a passenger boat offers connection to Reykhólar.

Arnarfjörður

Road

Arnarfjörður is one of the largest and most spectacular fjords in Iceland. It is surrounded by steep mountains and valleys that create strong appearance and mystique. The fjord is famous for its beautiful landscape and has fostered renowned personalities and artists.

Everyone can find something of interest in Arnarfjörður,- be it running on the yellow sand in Ketildalur, viewing the artworks of Samúel Jónsson in Selárdalur, the waterfall Dynjandi, visiting the Jón Sigurðsson Museum at Hrafnseyri or learning about monsters at the Sea Monster museum.

Ísafjarðardjúp

When visiting the Westfjords of Iceland, chances are you will be driving through some of the 8 fjords of Ísafjarðardjúp, fjord system, so it truly puts the “fjords” in your Westfjords adventure.

Amongst all the natural wonders of the area such as Hvítanes seal colony, Reykjanes geothermal area and the historical location Litlibær you will find a small community of 190 people, most based in the phoenix village of Súðavík. The village was rebuilt by its residents after a tragic avalanche in 1995. The “old” village is now used as a holiday area for families, friends and travelers between May-October.

Raggagarður Family Park, the Arctic Fox Centre, numerous walking and hiking paths make Súðavík and Ísafjarðardjúp a family friendly retreat for those looking to relax and enjoy life.

The Garden Skrúður

65° 55,736'N, 23° 34,330'W

The Garden Skrúður holds an important place in the Icelandic history of gardening. Skrúður is a vegetable garden on the shore of one of the Westfjords of Iceland, close to the Arctic Circle. Laid out on an incline facing south-west towards the Dýrafjörður inlet, it is backed by a grim chain of glacier-eroded mountains. Beside it stand a church and the guesthouse Núpur.

The garden was opened in 1909, the brain-child of the Reverend Sigtryggur Guðlaugsson (1862-1959) who, with his brother Kristinn, had started a school at Núpur a few years earlier. In 2013 Skrúður won the International Carlo Scarpa Prize for Gardens, awarded by the Benetton Foundation since 1990, possibly the world's only prize awarded to locations.

Seals

Seal watching is a fascinating experience and there is no better place to see these beautiful animals than where they are most at home i.e. in their natural habitat. Seals are naturally curious creatures and therefore, with a good camera, it should be relatively easy to get some excellent pictures of them in their proper environment. There are also a number of tours that offer seal watching, from land, sea or even from a kayak.

Seal watching is an experience that is long remembered, and certainly gives one a new perspective on life and nature.

Seals can be spotted in many locations in the Westfjords for example in Strandir area and in Hvítanes in the Ísafjarðardjúp fjord system.

Drangajökull

Drangajökull is Iceland's fifth largest glacier, around 150 km². With the highest peak, Jökulbunga, at 925 m above sea level, Drangajökull is the only Icelandic glacier which lies entirely below 1000 m altitude. Its lowest point is at around 140 m above sea level. Drangajökull is known to behave differently from other glaciers in the country. It goes through cycles of 50-60 years during which it grows and recedes. Only the first few years of the cycle are a growing period, followed by a receding period of several decades. Scientists have not been able to fully explain these periods, as they seem to be independent of weather and climate. The last period of growth came just after the year 2000.

When the Hornstrandir area was still inhabited, many communication routes lay across the glacier and people would cross it either walking or riding. Today, Drangajökull is becoming increasingly popular amongst outdoor enthusiasts. For those traveling by car it is easiest to reach the glacier by driving to Kaldalón (road #635) and then hike from there. It only takes 60-90 minutes hike from the road up to the edge of the glacier. Please remember that glaciers can be dangerous due to crevasses. Hence, never venture out on a glacier without consulting a local expert first, or being accompanied by an expert guide.

Arctic Foxes

The Westfjords of Iceland are known for their abundant wildlife, seals, whales, birds and a favorite of many the arctic foxes. Arctic foxes can be found throughout Iceland but one of the best places to see them are in the Westfjords.

Homstrandir Nature Reserve is one of a few places in Iceland where arctic foxes are completely protected. Because of this protection the foxes in Hornstrandir are especially tame and curious, this makes it even easier to get closer to them for a peak or even a picture or two.

If you do not want to venture into nature to chase after the arctic foxes you can always go to the Arctic Fox Centre in Súðavík to find out more about these amazing animals.

ATTRACTIONS

Vigur Island

Puffins, eiders, guillemots and arctic terns are this island's magnets, and they are all abundant. Indeed, as the puffins, which nest in burrows, have dug through much of the island's soil, travellers have to follow a certain path to avoid falling into one. This small bird, by some dubbed the penguin of the north, is a clumsy flier but impresses visitors by artfully stacking its beak full of sand eel or small fish, carrying it home to its hungry chicks. Being the opposite of the hospitable humans that live on the island, the Arctic terns fight to keep intruders away. Luckily, a stick held above the head does the trick. Eiders and humans share a mutual beneficence; eiders get protection by nesting in close vicinity of the people, who collect the precious down from the eider nests. One of the every day events is when locals feed a group of orphan eider chicks. In Vigur you find the smallest post office in Iceland, as well as the only windmill and beautifully renewed houses. Since an end was put to milk production on Vigur island, the inhabitants spend much of the winter preparing the eider down, collected over the summer, for export.

To get to Vigur, there is a daily boat tour from Ísafjörður.

Hornstrandir

This territory of the Arctic fox has been uninhabited since the 1950s. As isolated as it was then, it attracts the casual half-day visitors and serious gore-tex hikers alike. Its main attractions are three. First, the bird cliffs surrounding the bay of Hornvík, are a magnet of gigantic proportions. On the eastern side of the bay the cliff reaches a height of more than 500 metres, and the birds are teeming. Second, as there are no infrastructure and the tourists few in relation to the sheer size of the area, the sense of remoteness is strong. You can hike days on end without seeing a single person. The nature is pure and the tranquillity unmatched. Third, as the area is a haven for the Arctic fox (think hunting-ban and bird-packed cliffs), the chances of spotting one are high.

Boat tours depart from Ísafjörður, Bolungarvík and Norðurfjörður.

Árneshreppur

Árneshreppur is one of the smallest communities in Iceland, but comprises a large area. The inhabitants earn their income by raising sheep, but in recent years, tourism has grown in importance. Stunning landscape, proximity to the natural elements and rich fauna are the area's main attractions. Additionally, the area and community are steeped in history, such as of the Icelandic sagas, witch-hunts, herring adventures and folklore. A boat connects Norðurfjörður to Homstrandir, perfect for hikers and those who want to marvel the area from the sea.

Tourism has in the last few years seen a remarkable upswing. Now, travelers can camp in several places and choose from a variety of other accommodation choices. Kaffi Norðurfjörður (you guessed it, kaffi is both café and coffee) and Hótel Djúpavík offer an array of local food. In Djúpavík, a herring factory closed down in the 50's has been honored by an exhibition about its history. At Kört, local handcrafts and history are combined. Other services are available as well, such as a grocery store, a filling station and a unique swimming pool by the seaside.

Krossnespool in Árneshreppur

Reykhólar

N65° 26' 44.849" W22° 12' 25.830"

The small village of Reykhólar is truly a paradise for bird-watchers. Surrounded by the sea and coast on one hand; and wetland, meadow, grassland, and cliffs on the other, Reykhólar is an ideal dwelling for numerous species of birds. It is believed that up to 60 different species can be spotted in the Reykhólar area during the summer time, including the king of birds – the white tailed eagle.

Reykhólar is located on a small peninsula on the northern shore of the bay Breiðafjörður. The bay has countless small islands and skerries which are homes to a large population of sea birds. Some of the islands also have natural, geothermal hot-pots where visitors are allowed to bathe.

Visitors can enjoy the rich bird life of Reykhólar simply by walking around the area. Boat tours to the islands of Breiðafjörður depart from just outside the village.

Heydalur

Heydalur is a 6 km long valley in Mjóifjörður in Ísafjarðardjúp. In further days the story tells that 12 farmers were living in the valley. The oldest ruins tell us that the valley has been an inhabited area since before the year 1100.

Now there is only the farm hotel left in the middle of a beautiful surrounding countryside with a river, waterfall, bushy hillsides, mountains, fjords and the shore full of wildlife and flora.

On the other side of the river Heydalsá there is a hot spot from ancient time. The story tells that the bishop Gudmundur the Good blessed this hot spot in the 12th century and that many sick people have been cured after a visit here.

At Heydalur you also find original outdoor hot pots, a swimming pool and a sauna where you may relax after the many possible outdoor activities, such as riding, kayaking, hiking, and fishing, before a luxury dinner of local food. Keep your eyes open you may even see our fox running around.

Each season in Heydalur has a charm. The spring when you can follow the green colour and the birds coming, the summer with the bright nights full of life, the autumn with the beautiful colour and all the blueberries, the winter with the northern lights and snow.

Rauðasandur

Rauðasandur, (Red Sand), is precisely that: a beach with endless red sand. Well, not endless, but 10 km is a lot. The magnificent hues of the sand differ with daylight and weather, and the beach is the biggest pearl in a string of coves with sand ranging in colours from white through yellow through red to black, and in coarseness from very fine to sole-hurting chips of seashells. Just pure sand enlivened by countless seabirds and seals, an oasis with unique tranquility. Forget everything, except maybe getting the perfect shot of the ever-changing hues of yellow, orange and red.

Here's just pure sand and unique tranquillity. You might want to step out of the car, get the camera out and start walking on the seemingly endless beach.

If not, why not enjoy a cup of coffee in the French café and look at the spectacular view were Snæfellsjökull glacier in Snæfellsnes peninsula imperiously rivets your attention in the background.

Vatnsfjörður Nature Reserve

Road

N65° 34' 34.804" W23° 10' 6.519"

Iceland owes its name to Hrafna-Flóki or Raven-Floki. After a long navigation from Norway, he took land in Vatnsfjörður. Seeing the surrounding Breiðafjörður Bay full of ice, he announced that this place should be called Iceland.

Lakes and ponds are numerous in the Nature reserve. Lake Vatnsdalsvatn is the largest, with an area of two square kilometers. Approximately 20 species of birds inhabit the nature reserve. Both mice, Arctic foxes and mink roam the area but seals are easier to spot, because they like to laze about sunbathing on the reefs by Hörgsnes peninsula. There are numerous hiking trails in the area and you can take a walk along the shores and enjoy a dip in the memorable natural pool down by the sea.

There is a hotel at Flókalundur with a restaurant, gas-station, swimming pool and camping ground.

The Natural pool in Flókalundur

Natural pools - The Water Trail

The WaterTrail (Vatnavinir Vestfjarða) leads you along tourist destinations, with natural geothermal pools and hot springs. In these places in the Westfjords, sustainable wellness tourism is being developed. The WaterTrail is in the process of building new and preserving old natural hot springs in rural locations with emphasis on the therapeutic effects of thermal baths.

The Westfjords have many hidden gems, among them plenty of natural or partially man-made hot springs in remote locations. The abundance of natural warm water and a rich history have created a unique outdoor bathing culture in direct contact with nature. The origin of the bathing pools is geothermal water that flows directly and constantly from the ground. In summer our visitors can enjoy the romantic midnight sun in the wilderness, and in winter lying in a warm pool watching the northern lights is also an unforgettable experience. The perfect travel adventure is when thermal bathing is integrated and enriched with culture and outdoor activities in natural environment. Keep an eye on us at www.watertrail.is.

ATTRACTIONS

Swimming pools

Public swimming pools can be found in almost every town and village of the Westfjords. Opening hours are usually long, the entrance cheap and more often than not there is a hot tub or two for those who prefer relaxing to swimming. Natural pools can also be found all over in the region, most of them free of charge.

A strict etiquette applies in the public pools of Iceland. Guests are required to wash thoroughly without swimsuits before and after entering the swimming pools. These rules can usually be bent when bathing in the natural pools though, as these often lack both changing rooms and showers.

Gvendarlaug in Laugarhóll

History

Fish and sheep. If only given a space of three words, these would be near the top. Luckily, 1100 years of history can usually be given a little bit more space than three words. The most visited history attractions are 15 minutes apart, two museums that approach the maritime history from two different angles. Ósvör in the village of Bolungarvík, is one. There, the sheep-skin clad guide shows you around the huts where fishermen lived for thousand years. The maritime museum in Ísafjörður fills up the holes in the history, showing how the fish was processed and what was done with it after the processing.

At the Arctic Fox Centre in Súðavík, you will learn about the 1100 year story of legal foxhunting in Iceland and get into the world of the legendary foxhunters of the past.

Another museum of interest is The Museum of Icelandic Sorcery and Witchcraft. The museum is in two parts, one located in Hólmavík and one 25 km away in Bjarnarfjörður. Other museums of historical interest include Hnjótur and Hrafnseyri, where a hero of independence, Jón Sigurðsson (the gentleman on the ISK 500 bill), is commemorated and the Sea Monster Museum in Bíldudalur.

Fishing

Iceland boasts of one of the world's few sustainable fisheries, catching fish both on big trawlers and small boats. A good addition to the commercial fishing is that around 2000 anglers come annually to villages in the peninsula to try to catch the big one. And big they are. In 2007, a halibut of 175 kg (385 lbs) was caught on a fishing rod near Suðureyri, and in 2010 one of whopping 220 kg (485 lbs) was caught.

Those more inclined to sweet water fishing, can find many rivers and lakes around the peninsula to catch Arctic char and salmon although the best salmon rivers are usually fully booked, there are plenty of drop-in places to catch char.

Skötuförður in Ísafjörðardalur

Culture

Many aspects of culture are intangible; it is how people behave and how society is organised. However, it has its concrete manifestations as well. The best bet for a first stop is a museum. They are scattered all over the peninsula, covering areas such as pirates (Patreksfjörður), sea monsters (Bíldudalur), sorcery and witchcraft (Hólmavík), and foxes (Súðavík). Want more? Old tools from fishermen (in Ísafjörður and Bolungarvík), sheep farming museum (near Hólmavík) and old tractors (near Reykhólar) all have their dedicated museums.

Also of big interest are the local handicrafts traditions that flourish in every fjord and valley. Almost all villages have their energetic bunch, knitting and crocheting and selling to interested tourists. Some interesting innovations can be found, especially those based on the patterns used for Icelandic wool sweaters.

And then there is the intangible aspect. Keep your eyes open for village feasts, held all over all through the summer. Strike up a conversation about the weather with the one next to you in the hot-dog line and there you go: local culture in one of its many manifestations.

ATTRACTIONS

Hiking

When hiking in the Westfjords, there is always a tendency to hike between two fjords. Understandably; if you look at the map, there is most often a pass or two between any fjords and the feeling of looking down the other side of the mountain is one to savour.

One of the most popular area for hiking is without a doubt Homstrandir Nature Reserve. The reserve is ideal for longer hikes, and there are day tours available from Ísafjörður as well. However, its biggest advantage is also its disadvantage, which is the inaccessibility and lack of service.

The rest of the Westfjords are just as stunning, for example Látrabjarg, the biggest birdcliff in Europe, and Rauðasandur.

At the nearest information centre, make sure to pick up a hiking map for the area you want to visit. The maps, seven in total, cover between them the whole peninsula.

Horseback riding

One of the great adventures you can take part in when visiting Iceland is riding the small and hardy Icelandic horses, known for their strong character and bred to survive through cold and starvation. Trotting along a sandy beach or through a wooded valley is an unforgettable experience and gives you a different view of the surrounding nature. Inexperienced riders need not worry, the horses are calm.

Why not combine the horse riding with some fishing? In Heydalur you can ride the horses up the valley to a heath where you can try your luck at catching trout in Lake Ausuvatn. There are also horse rentals in Ísafjörður, Þingeyri and Hólmavík.

ATTRACTIONS

Grímsey island

Grímsey island is the jewel of Steingrímsfjörður, located virtually at the doorsteps of the village Drangsnæs. Grímsey is a bird paradise. Its signature bird is the Puffin as the island has one of the most dense Puffin colony in Iceland. There are some 31.000 nesting holes, home to about 75.000 individuals. Among other birds that thrive on Grímsey are Shag, Arctic Tern, Black Guillemot, Razorbill and Northern Fulmar which all together with the Puffin create an extraordinary symphony of birdlife.

There is a daily boat tour available from Drangsnæs to Grímsey and it takes only 10 minutes to sail to the island.

Kayaking

Kayaking in the deep fjords of the west is an amazing and different experience, giving you an opportunity to get close to the rich birdlife, seals, and other creatures of the sea. This is an excellent way to explore the fjords and islands from an unusual angle.

Although kayaking might seem like a strenuous activity, it is surprisingly easy to glide calmly between the towering mountains. Novices and experienced paddlers alike will find something to their liking, whether it be a two hour bird watching tour or a week-long wildlife adventure. Ísafjörður, Ögur, Heydalur, Reykjanes, Flateyri and Djúpavík are the places to go, for those interested.

TRAVELLING WITH KIDS

TRAVELLING WITH KIDS

Hey kids this is for you!

Traveling with adults can be such a nuisance. They usually pretend to know everything and then end up making all the wrong decisions. It is a universal fact that the best way to ruin a perfect vacation is to leave the adults in control. Hence, we decided to provide you with a toolkit for the struggle ahead. Read the following pages and use the recommendations there to battle the bad ideas from the old folks in the front seats.

Natural pools

Whether you have spent (too) many hours in the car, had a long hike looking for elves and trolls, been kayaking amongst seals or spent the day at museums, playgrounds or cafés, there is no better way to top the day than to dip into a warm, geothermal pool. The Westfjords area has numerous natural hot pots and pools, some of which are accessible day and night at no cost, while others have specific opening hours and admission fee.

You're on vacation, so why don't you try staying up late and bathe in the midnight sun? You'll be the only one in your school who has ever done that!

Sandy beaches

Iceland is not exactly known as the land of golden beaches - unless, of course, you're going to the Westfjords. The area has almost half of Iceland's coastal line and you will quickly realize that white and golden beaches are not uncommon.

The Barðaströnd coastline, Rauðasandur, Breiðavík, Hænuvík, Ketildalur coastline, Öundurarfjörður and Norðurfjörður are amongst the spots where you can find beautiful beaches to play on.

Although it is not recommended to try swimming in the ice-cold sea, building castles and creating sculptures of sand is great fun for all generations. So too, is collecting shells and looking for signs of intellectual life, such as worms, starfish and amphipods.

Birds

You saw a picture of a puffin in one of the travel books or brochures before you came to Iceland, right? And after you arrived, you quickly had the pleasure of meeting an arctic tern in person, right? But there are more birds, so many more, and here in the Westfjords you have found the best possible place to get to know them. The Reykhólar area is probably the best bird-watching site in Iceland, the home to around 60 different types of birds, including the white-tailed eagle. Látrabjarg and Hornbjarg are amongst the biggest bird cliffs in the North-Atlantic, the islands Vigur and Grímsey are puffin colonies without comparison.

The list goes on and on. How about a small competition? Which family member sees the most different types of birds during your stay in the Westfjords? The winner gets the window seat on the flight back home!

Fishing

Although Icelanders have been fishing for more than a thousand years, there is still plenty of fish left for you to catch. Organized sea-angling tours are offered from many villages, but you can also fish from the shore. There are also numerous rivers and lakes for those who prefer freshwater fishing, but please remember that you need a license for many of them so it is best to ask the locals first.

Museums

Boring, boring, boring, right? Absolutely - except for the museums in the Westfjords! Here we have all the museums that the scholars and adventurers of the future could possibly want to see: Learn about the king of birds at the White-Tailed Eagle Centre in Króksfjarðarnes (near Reykhólar), go to Hnjótur Museum (near Látrabjarg) to learn about the amazing rescue operation that saved a crew from a stranded ship under the severe cliffs of Látrabjarg, or go to the Sea Monster Museum in Bíldudalur to learn about the strange creatures that have been following you for the past few days. Aspiring artists should not miss Samúel Jónsson's sculptures in Selárdalur, while the future engineers might prefer at the Old Mechanic Workshop in Þingeyri.

Explorers and nature scientists will feel at home amongst the birds, foxes and the polar bear at the Natural History Museum in Bolungarvík (the birds there do not count in the competition mentioned in the "Birds" section). The Ósvör Museum in Bolungarvík and the Maritime Museum in Ísfljörður offer a rare insight into the lives of the fishermen of earlier centuries. You can get up close and personal with the arctic fox at the Arctic Fox Museum in Súðavík and learn some true stories about magic at the Museum of Icelandic Sorcery and Witchcraft in Hólmavík.

These are just a few examples, there are many more museums in the area so if you are fortunate enough to experience one of those rare rainy days in the Westfjords, use it wisely and visit as many museums as you possibly can.

Talk to the animals

We don't have many wild animals here in the Westfjords, but if you are lucky you might see an arctic fox or a mink running across the road. Another animal which seems to love running across the road is the sheep. They tend to jump across at the worst possible moment, so remind the driver to slow down while driving amongst sheep.

Many farm-guesthouses offer their guests the opportunity to see animals such as cows and horses. At Skálholt, by Barðaströnd, an open farm allows visitors to see pigs, cows, hens and more.

It is a well-known fact here in Iceland that on New Year's Eve and the last day of Christmas, January 6, cows can speak and understand human language. You can try to talk to them at other times of the year, but most likely they won't understand you - just like your parents.

Pet the cod

The cod and the sheep might not be regarded as the most intelligent creatures on planet Earth, but nevertheless we can, to a large degree, thank them for the fact that Icelanders have managed to survive in this harsh country for more than a thousand years. Presumably you have already seen a lot of sheep by the roads and highways, but in the eco-friendly village of Suðureyri you have a unique opportunity to greet the cod in person.

As you enter the village you will see a small pond on the left hand side of the road. This is the home to a group of cods who are eagerly waiting to meet you. First, though, you should go to the Fisherman Minimarket to obtain some cod food. Then you come back to the pond, go to the small pier and throw a little bit of the food into the water. Once the cods realize that the party has started, they will accept your invitation quickly. Sometimes they will allow you to pet them and even eat out of the palm of your hand. Be careful, though, as the term “finger food” has a different and more painful meaning in the cod-world than amongst humans.

Geology 101

The guy who wrote your geology textbook might not have known this, but in Iceland we only have three types of rock: trolls, elves and sea-monsters. Need a scientific explanation? Here it is: In the earlier centuries, Iceland was full of trolls. They were, however, very sensitive to daylight and if the sun shed its light on them, they turned to stone. Thus, little by little, the trolls died out but you can still find numerous cliffs and rocks which prove beyond doubt that trolls once existed.

Amongst famous trolls are the two big pillars of rock in Kollafjörður, south of Hólmavík (road #68). They are the remains of the trolls who tried to dig a canal to separate the Westfjords from the rest of Iceland. Their co-worker can be found in the village Drangsnæs. If you look carefully you will realize that there are trolls almost everywhere. Count how many you can find during your stay. If you practice hard enough, you will learn to separate between rocks that used to be trolls, and rocks that are the homes of elves and other hidden creatures. Amongst famous “elves-rocks” are Dvergasteinn, close to the village Súðavík (road #61), and the big Bjartmannssteinn, right on the tip of the Borgarland peninsula (take the short gravel road just east of the junction 60/607). Bjartmannssteinn is actually a harbor city where merchant-elves from other countries are said to come on their big ships to trade with their Icelandic counterparts. If you manage to see them, you are one of the few chosen ones. Please remember that elves usually don't like loud noise or other disturbance so be careful whenever you are close to a rock which might belong to them. Remember also that elves have been known to seduce humans to enter their world, but once you have stepped over the boundaries it is difficult to get back!

The third type of rock, sea-monsters, can only be found in one place in Iceland, at the shore between the valleys Hvestudalur and Hringisdalur (road # 619), just west of the village Bíldudalur. This is where the sea monsters crawl on land and willingly turn to stone once they have grown old and weak. So, after you have visited the sea monster museum in Bíldudalur, go to this shore, examine the rocks and try to recognize as many different types of monsters as you can.

Enjoy local art

Before you burn this page: no, we are not asking you to visit one of those galleries where adults walk around trying to look like they understand the deeper meaning of the “art” on the walls. Far from it. We are talking about works created by the greatest artist of all times, Mother Nature. For the past 16 million years she has been working hard on shaping the Westfjords peninsula, just to make sure the area will look its best during your visit. How about sculptures like Vaðalfjöll mountains near Reykhólar, or the majestic cliffs at Látrabjarg and Hombjarg?

Or a painting like Rauðasandur and music like the thundering sound of the waterfall Dynjandi? Here is your next mission: make sure you are in control of the family camera. Take pictures of the artworks you like best and then use your Instagram account (or borrow somebody else’s) to post your pictures using the hashtag #westfjords. The pictures will then be displayed on the Westfjords Facebook page as well as on our official website www.westfjords.is. Now you have created your own artwork and put it on display for the whole world to see!
